MARCH SIDE BAR

Please join us for a very special Side Bar presentation on Thursday, March 10 with renowned artist Valentino Dixon. This will be an interactive drawing class where we will spend an hour together creating artwork while hearing the very moving story of Valentino and his wrongful conviction and subsequent release. This presentation will be limited to 24 in-person attendees with a virtual option for others. Valentino will be appearing via video. We expect this event to fill quickly, so sign up as soon as you can! Please click here to register.

VALENTINO’S STORY: THE STORY OF A SON, A FATHER, AN ARTIST, A FREE MAN

Born on October 20, 1969, Valentino Dixon grew up in East Buffalo, New York, the inner city. Valentino was his mother’s only son and was raised by both of his parents. As a child, Valentino was a gifted artist who loved to draw.

At the time of his arrest in 1991, Valentino’s daughter, Valentina, was six months old. Although Valentina has lived most of her life without a father present, their bond has remained strong. Valentino’s mother, wife Louise and daughter, Valentina, were his strongest advocates.

On August 10, 1991, a late-night fight broke out at a gathering outside of Louie’s Texas Red Hots restaurant at the intersection of East Delevan and Bailey Avenue in Buffalo, NY. In the ensuing mayhem, Torriano Jackson was shot and killed. Based on an anonymous tip, the police arrested Valentino Dixon for his murder and for shooting at three other people.

Just two days after Valentino’s arrest, Lamarr Scott confessed to the news media that he had in fact shot and killed Jackson. Despite this confession, Scott was not taken into custody, and detectives continued to pursue Valentino. Prosecutors then built a case against Valentino based on several shaky eyewitnesses (some of whom later recanted and claimed to have been pressured by the police to frame Valentino). At trial, Valentino was convicted and sentenced to 38 1/2 years to life in prison when his court appointed attorney failed to call eight eyewitnesses and introduce the confession to the jury.

Valentino struggled to adjust to life in prison, until he reconnected with his inner passion for art. He regained his motivation to draw by following his uncle’s advice: “if you reclaim your talent, you can reclaim your life.” Valentino has been drawing ever since; for more than two decades, he drew from six to ten hours a day.

At one point, the warden at Attica Correctional Facility asked Valentino to draw the 12th hole of the legendary Augusta National Golf Club. Valentino, who had never set foot on a golf course and knew nothing about the sport, starting drawing images inspired by photos in the magazine Golf Digest. Eventually, Valentino even drew his own golf creations and said that golf art became his escape from the harsh reality of prison.

In 2012, Golf Digest editorial director Max Adler featured Valentino and his stunning artwork in his “golf saved my life” column. Adler also researched Valentino’s case, and concluded that Valentino was truly innocent of the murder for which he had been wrongfully convicted. The next year, The Golf Channel ran a segment about Valentino’s case as well, gaining him — and his artistic talent — national attention.

Today, Valentino lives in Buffalo, NY with his family and uses his freedom not only to create beautiful commissioned art pieces but is now devoted to working with lawmakers to achieve prison and sentencing reform, and champion the voices of the wrongfully convicted until they have achieved freedom.

OFFICE SPACE AVAILABLE AT THE BCBA

The BCBA has a unique opportunity for individual attorneys or even a small firm with two new permanent offices. This is a great way to instantly grow your network and have access to all the bar association has to offer. Each office is approximately 250 square feet with full access to the conference rooms, patio, kitchen, and full open workspace. Utilities, internet and phone are all included along with use of copier. Parking is free, and our location is incredibly convenient to both Boulder and Longmont. Offices are leasing for $1200 per month and are available now. Please contact Kyle or Laura for more information.
I recently got to participate in the Kick Off meeting for the Legal Aid Foundation of Colorado’s Associates Campaign. For anyone who is unfamiliar, the Associates Campaign is a friendly fundraising competition amongst law firms to see who can raise the most money for civil legal services. This competition is celebrating its 17th year, and this year, it began at 8 AM over a Zoom call. The fact that more than 80 people were willing to be present for this cause at 8 AM over Zoom was impressive, but more so, I enjoyed hearing about all the creative ways the firm representatives were planning to cajole their colleagues into donating money. Ideas ranged from firm-sponsored happy hours to Flip-Flop Fridays to incentivize hitting fundraising goals. This made me think of our local Boulder fundraiser, the Justice For All Ball.

The Justice For All Ball (or JFAB) is our annual fundraiser for the Legal Aid Foundation of Colorado, supporting the work of Colorado Legal Services to provide civil legal services to low-income and senior members of our community. It has been going on since 2018, and 2022 will be the fifth year this incredible fundraiser has been held.

JFAB replaced the Food Wine Jazz Art benefit and been a successful and fun way to support the work of legal services. From live music and dancing to a silent auction and cocktails, this is a great way to spend an evening! On my office corkboard, I have pictures of the Boulder County Legal Services staff in the photo booth, and it always touches my heart to see these pictures.

In 2021, JFAB was held remotely. Despite Zoom fatigue, Laura and the committee put together an event that felt inspirational (as we featured client stories) and fun! This year’s event will return to in-person programming, and I can’t wait to see our legal community gather together and enjoy themselves!

To support JFAB this year you can:

- Buy a ticket! If you have the resources, bring a spouse or friend! If you have a lot of friends, buy a table! Then, dance the night away with us! Please click here to purchase an Early Bird ticket ($50) before the price goes up on Friday, April 1.

- Join the planning committee! This group comes up with creative ways to increase the fun and the overall dollar amount at the end of the event! Please click here to join.

- Help to sponsor the event! This is a great way for firms to support the work on a larger scale and get good publicity at the same time. Email Laura to confirm your sponsorship today.

- Can’t afford to donate? Volunteer your time with Boulder County Legal Services/Colorado Legal Services. Giving your time to clients in need can be the most valuable use of your skills as an attorney.

JFAB will take place this year on April 9, 2022 at 7 PM at the JCC, 6007 Oreg Ave, Boulder, CO. Please join us!

Special thanks to our 2022 Philanthropic sponsor of the Justice For All Ball, Lyons Gaddis.

About JFAB

20 years ago, the Boulder County Bar Association started a fundraiser called Food Wine Jazz Art to benefit Colorado Legal Services. While this event was a great success, recent cuts to the federal budget made us realize four years ago that we needed to rebrand our event to draw a larger crowd and raise even more money for legal services.

The 2018 Boulder County Justice For All Ball was the beginning of our new era. We kept the event geared toward the legal community, but expanded further to include partners, clients, and friends. We held the event on a weekend evening to accommodate those who find a weeknight event hard to attend and brought in members who have never attended a bar event. The event was a huge success.

This year, we’re excited to return to the Boulder JCC. We will have music led by Jessica Ahmed of the Diamond Orchestra. She will be performing with a solo piano which showcases her amazing talent. Hors d’oeuvres will be available along with delicious desserts from Front Range Catering. This year continues to bring new sponsorship opportunities if you are unable to attend but still want to contribute to a worthy cause. We are asking for Young Lawyer and Paralegal sponsorships to allow those that might not have the funds in their budget to purchase a ticket.

We look forward to seeing you at the Justice For All Ball!

HIGH TIMES AND LOW FLOWS ON THE COLORADO RIVER

GREGOR MACGREGOR

It’s hard to imagine the sense of accomplishment in the Colorado River Basin in May of 2019. High atop the walls of Hoover Dam, representatives of the Colorado River Basin states and the federal government signed the Drought Contingency Plans (DCPs), a negotiated agreement on how to share shortages as reservoir levels in Lake Mead and Lake Powell declined under the weight of a 19-year sustained drought. The agreement was considered forward thinking, a just-in-case as more comprehensive guidelines were set for the negotiating table in 2025. Hardly two years later the Bureau of Reclamation declared the first ever shortage in the basin and fresh negotiations to conserve water began.

All stakeholders have recognized that the DCPs are not enough to avert the myriad possible crises. The reservoir levels in Powell and Mead are both approaching dead pool, the elevation at which water cannot flow into the dam’s turbines. Dead pool would not only result in less renewable energy on the grid but endanger many infrastructure and environmental programs funded by power sales. Worse, a further drop in elevation would put the remaining water in the reservoirs below the final dam intakes, preventing any water from passing downstream. It’s a fair question to ask how we have gotten here as the 100th anniversary of the Colorado River Compact comes and goes.

What we refer to as “The Law of the River” isn’t a statutory scheme found in the index of a case book. Instead, it is a complex assortment of compacts, state water law, federal legislation, and Supreme Court decisions. The Colorado River Compact of 1922 serves as the foundation for the other 11 major components of the Law of the River and their various interpretations, minutes, and sub-agreements.

The Compact is as notable for what it does say as what it doesn’t. Its core is an agreement between the two basins of the Colorado River, not the states, to distribute the River’s flow. The Upper Basin States of Wyoming, Colorado, Utah, and a portion of New Mexico have the right to put 7.5 million acre-feet (maf) of water to beneficial use in perpetuity. The Lower Basin States of California, Arizona, Nevada, and a portion of New Mexico are allowed 7.5 maf a year, plus an additional 1 maf. Surpluses would go towards a contemplated future Mexican treaty and be split between the other users.

Absent from the Compact are allocations to individual states, an allocation for the future treaty with Mexico, or an allocation for the many Native American reservations in the basin. The Compact also lacks definitions for key terms such as “beneficial use” or the nature of obligations between the basins in times of shortage. The Compact Commissioners chose this structure as a matter of political expediency. In theory, the ambiguity provided politicians in each state legislature and Congress enough flexibility to ratify the Compact. This was true for all the states except for Arizona, which would hold out through decades of litigation with California. However, the apparent abundance of water allowed the other six states and the federal government to go ahead with the systematic development of the basin. This apparent abundance was the result of the compact commissioners using expedient science to make the compact more palatable.

It is received wisdom that the Colorado River had some of its wettest years leading up to the compact negotiations. We typically speak of this as a stroke of terrible luck, that the negotiators did the best with what they had, even as they made allocations the Colorado could never deliver. The mistake could be forgiven if the narrative were true, but it isn’t. John Fleck and Eric Kuhn in their recent book “Science be Damned” instead show that there were much more accurate reports available, both in their technical rigor and in their inclusion of the very dry mid-19th Century. The commissioners’ own notes demonstrate a confusion about the methodology, but there was no serious inquiry into the numbers. The result was a politically expedient Compact that allocated as much water to the states as they wanted. But these allocations were based on a presumed 17.3 maf of flow, instead of the more realistic 11.3-13 maf figures available to the commissioners.

The story of the Compact is the story of the Law of the River writ large. Sound hydrological methodology and clear terms have been eschewed in the name of development and political expediency. This was true when Hoover Dam was authorized, when the Treaty with Mexico was signed, and when the Central Arizona Project was authorized. Each major facet of the Law of the River represented an opportunity to step back and consider the assumptions underlying the Compact, but each time expediency was aided by above-average runoffs, obfuscating the underlying hydrological reality. The structural deficit, the difference between the amount of water we have allocated and the amount of water available, has been waiting in the wings for the last 100 years. Our current drought, likely the new normal, and the complete development of the basin have combined to reveal the true extent of last century’s wishful thinking.

For outside observers, the rush to negotiate successive agreements between the states, like the Lower Basin’s 500+ Plan, may seem off. In a state of strict prior appropriation, within a basin of prior appropriation states, we might expect that our legal structure is built specifically to deal with scarcity and that there is a simple response – go down the list of priorities and shut headgates until the water supply matches senior water rights’ demand. However, the ambiguity of key provisions of each Law of the River component makes any reliance on its provisions a risk. Placing new agreements between the states on top of the existing Law of the River is good adaptive management, but it also betrays a lack of confidence in that law to address the current crisis. As we look ahead to a drier climate, one we now know is the driest since the year 800, the structure of the Compact will be tested for the first time in 100 years.

If you are interested in learning more about the Law of the River join me and the BCBA for the CLE presentation The Law of the Colorado River: Emerald Mile Edition on Wednesday, March 16 at 12:00 pm (click here to register). I would greatly appreciate donations to CU’s Law of the Colorado River Field Seminar. This seminar is a culmination for law students seeking their certificates in natural resources law, a floating symposium where they defend their research and graduate deep within the walls of the Grand Canyon. You can learn more about the symposium, the river runners, and make a donation at Boulder Crowdfunding (cu.edu).
